Twenty-five girls in a brass factory at Birmingham, Conn., have struck because, among their grievances, the foreman had the windows painted to keep the girls from flirting with outsiders.

The latest invention of the Trenton, N. J., potters is the manufacture of clay coffee beans, which, when mixed with genuine Java or mocha, in a day or two become so like the real bean in color and smell that they cannot be told apart except by taste and weight.

At Tremont, Pa., Saturday, the Reading Railroad Company opened the Good Spring colliery, one of the largest in the anthracite region. Two slopes have been run into the mine, four hundred cars of coal will be taken there from daily, and seven hundred and fifty men will be employed.

The farmers along the seaboard and Roanoke railroad, who are badly reduced in means on account of the repeated failure of crops, are cutting and shipping all the different kinds of woods growing in their country, especially the cotton-woods, such as walnut, dogwood and poplar, and soon the whole face of the country will be cleared of every description of timber and firewood. Immense quantities of poplar are also shipped to the North for manufacturing purposes.
